SOME BRIGHT WORKING WOMEN.

They Are Engaged in Teaching Girls to Aid Each Other and Themselves. It has long be a mooted question whether women were capable of successfully uniting for the attainment of any particular object

AT THE PRESIDENT'S DESK. in which all those banded together and a mutual interest. They have proved their ability so to do on several occasions, but never so forcibly as at the recent convention of the Association of Working Girls' societies in New York. Delegates were present from all the principal cities of the United States and Canada. Each session saw the assembly room of the Metropolitan Opera house filled with earnest, intelligent women, some hardly emancipated from the short skirts of child-hood, others in the maturity of their powers, and still others whose gray hair told of honored age. But old and young alike were animated by one common purpose—the bet-terment of the condition of working women through the medium of co-operation, It was in no sense a gathering of "cranks" or "reformers." Those present had no quarrel to make with capital or employers. They simply met to consult regarding the best means of utilizing their wages and experience for the common good. Various ideas were presented, some diametrically opposed to others; but along one particular line the thoughts of all ran smoothly and in concord. That was the line of domestic happiness, of home, of family. This portion of Miss Dodge's open ing address, for example, was received with rapturous applause:

"When the convention closes we hope also to organize a B. W. and M. branch for the young brides, wives and mothers who were formerly club members. And when we have the wives, mothers and babies all enrolled we shall hope still further that the brothers and young busbands shall unite and co-operate with us in developing means for self culture and a higher life."

And this portion of Mrs. Terhune's address also secured the heartiest approval:

"The home is to the nation what the ark was to the drowned old world. All men who sver were beards, from Adam to Benjamin Harrison, never have and never can make a these things."

kirs: Termina also declared that in associa Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrnp should always be used for children teething. It soothes the child, softens the gums, alloys all pain, curss wind colic, and is the best termedy for diarrhora. Twenty fivecents a bottle.

Mrs. Termina also declared that in association and mitted formula of women's clubs for mutual improvement lay the true secret of building up a character equal to the intellectual and practical demands of domestic life. "What kind of a wife," she asked, "can agiri make who never thinks of anything ut her trade, her clothes and herself? Empty bended wives, who can talk of nothing that interests an intelligent man, are respon-gible for three-fourties of the drunkenness and unfaithfulness that makes bell of

The delegates in attendance were in no sense of the word either nustand hunters or suffragists. But they recognize the possibilities and duties of life, and it is their sincere and praiseworthy desire so to equip themselves mentally that the opportunities of the future spall not find them unprepared to fill their destined roles either as working women, Wives or voters.

The meeting at the Metropolitan Opera house differed from a convention of men in several respects. The reading of papers was carefully distened to, only an occasional hum of satisfaction or ripple of applicuse accentuating the silence of its audience. The pre-siding officer did not have to rap with her gavel once to bring the delegate from Blankville to order, and her pretty subordinates, the sergeante-at-arms who clustered about the entrance door, unlike men who hold the same positions, had no one to warn to quit smoking and none to eject for drunken ob streperousness. Insumit, they fintered around to find scatting accommodations for busy, cheerful and just a little bit impressed with the importance of their office. In so far as their duties related to the preservation of the pence they bad a sues are.
